

SCHOOLS WHICH REQUIRE OR RECOMMEND SAT II TESTS

All data provided on this list are current for the 2003-2004 school year. Special circumstances and unusual conditions are indicated wherever known, so please read this list carefully. In all cases, however, be certain to double-check with the school(s) to which you are applying to assure that information on SAT II testing is both accurate and up-to-date. Sources of information consulted in the compilation of this list include: The College Handbook 2004, published by The College Board; individual college catalogs and web pages; and direct telephone contact with individual admission offices

The list is organized by state with colleges and universities listed alphabetically within each section. If no bracketed statement follows the name of the college, SAT II tests are REQUIRED for admission to that school. In all other cases—SAT II recommended or known special circumstances—specific information is provided

A special note to homeschooled students: your requirements may be somewhat more extensive than those for individuals that attend public or private school. Please be certain to check with each individual college or university regarding SAT II requirements (or recommendations) for homeschooled students
